Description

Louis XIV-era walnut and wrought-iron box - 17th century, High PeriodA delightful and charming 17th-century box, reflecting the taste for precious objects and the great decorative refinement that characterized the reign of Louis XIV and the art of living at Versailles. Its beechwood core is clad in an elegant walnut veneer, whose warm tones highlight the simplicity and elegance of its lines. The box stands out for its remarkable iron lock surround as well as the finely openwork spandrels that adorn its lid, lending the piece a delicate and exceptionally refined decorative touch. It features an iron handle and rests on four small wrought-iron feet, which fully contribute to its charm and antique character. With its compact size, the quality of its materials, and the care
