Description

An antique pair of small white porcelain jars for rouge or ointment, made in a Parisian porcelain factory, dating from the 19th century. Polychrome decoration featuring bouquets of flowers in slight relief, composed of roses, small blossoms, and foliage, embellished with small painted insects. The upper part is accented by a frieze of interlaced motifs painted in gold, while a gold border adorns the base. Mark painted in blue, accompanied by a gold number. These small containers were intended to hold makeup, ointments, or cosmetic preparations. Circa 1830-1860. Good condition
