Description

A view of the countryside in Ille-et-Vilaine, specifically in Antrain-sur-Couesnon--a charming small town in Brittany, recognizable by the bulb-shaped steeple of its church. The technique employed by Philippe Girardot involves using gouache as a base to provide depth, followed by layers of various soft pastels, which constitute the bulk of the work and create the final scene. The painting is set within a gilded frame, accented by a mat (marie-louise), and protected by a pane of glass. Philippe Girardot's work is regularly exhibited at the Galerie Jean de Châtillon in Saint-Malo.
