Description

An interesting antique 19th-century cellar lamp, part of the family of candlesticks, candelabras, and torches traditionally used in cellars and vineyards.It consists of a vertical wrought-iron cage, inside which a movable holder slides to hold a candle. This mechanism allowed the height of the flame to be adjusted as the candle burned.The piece rests on an elegant turned wooden base, featuring a lovely antique patina and the characteristic turning work of traditional craftsmanship.The wrought iron also retains a beautiful dark patina, attesting to its age and use.An interesting detail: the base bears an old marking consisting of the letters C R, which could correspond to the initials of a winery or estate, possibly located in Champagne or Burgundy.This hypothesis naturally remains to be
