Description

A very beautiful Louis XIII cabinet from 18th century, made of solid walnut and consisting of three stacked sections.The lower section rests on four large-diameter ball-shaped legs, which are topped by heavy molding. This section opens at the front with a large crosswise drawer featuring two wrought-iron handles and a lock that uses the same key as the two doors.It is flanked by two small consoles with foliage decoration. Molding holds the central section in place when it is positioned.The second section opens with two large doors, each divided into three panels decorated with bold diamond points and framed by thick moldings. Each side is decorated with two equal sections consisting of thick flat-strip panels set within heavily molded frames. They are also separated by an entablature molding.The
