Description

- A female statuette, with a slender body and arms raised above her head, made of terracotta in the style of the ancient Kore figures. - This terracotta figurine echoes the stylistic characteristics of the Kore figurines found in Greece around 500 B.C. (Archaic period): almond-shaped eyes, circular earrings, and an elaborate, structured headdress. Her hair is arranged in streaked bangs falling over a bare forehead, with other long, wavy strands cascading down her chest, while the rest of her hair is gathered at the back in a veil. She is dressed in a very fine chiton, covered by a thicker himation draped over her shoulders, which falls on either side of her body in symmetrical folds and cascades. - Her pose, with her arms raised and her hands resting on her head, may be associated
