Description

The name of the Romanian sculptor Demetre Haralamb Chiparus (1886-1947) may not be the most widely recognized, yet he served as a direct inspiration for our sculptor, Louis Sosson, through a subject that became highly popular: the "hoop dancer."

Living in Paris at the time, Chiparus drew inspiration from the capital's myriad performances--a blend of exoticism, eroticism, and elegance. From cabaret dancers and the Ballets Russes to acts inspired by Oriental or Indian dance, there was no shortage of models; these influences led the Romanian artist to create the figure of the "hoop dancer"--a woman with a supple, scantily clad body, posed with a hoop. The work was an immediate success, perfectly capturing the essence of the Art Deco aesthetic:

serpentine lines, fine materials, a fusion of the exotic and the classical--all brought together in a single piece. Our bronze statuette stands as a worthy successor to this quintessential 1920s style. Louis Sosson, an expert in chryselephantine sculpture, here explores the medium of bronze. His hoop dancer--adorned only with a diadem and a bracelet--rises gracefully from a marble base. She is captured in an elegant, poised movement, ready to spring forward, as suggested by the tension of a graceful contrapposto. This small, quintessentially Art Deco bronze is in excellent condition; it deserves a prominent place and serves as a fitting tribute to Louis Sosson--a talented, yet largely overlooked, artist.
