Description

Stately, openwork, egg-shaped lamp base made of glazed ceramic in shades of beige, brown, and mottled brown--both satin-finished and smooth--mimicking the appearance of rock or volcanic textures (Fat Lava), topped with a neckglazed in eggshell colors. In the style of French ceramicist Georges Pelletier or Italian-Canadian Raphaël Giarrusso, both of whom collaborated in the 1950s.This type of lamp was very characteristic of the Mid-Century-style (1950s-1960s) productions of the Poterie d'Accolay in Burgundy. At Poteries d'Accolay, which he joined in the mid-1950s while still a student, Georges Pelletier primarily designed and signed lighting fixtures (table lamps and giant floor lamps) as well as figurines and articulated characters. It was within this
