Description

This lamp, which likely dates from the late Roman Empire (5th or early 6th century A.D.), is in excellent condition. An animal is depicted, likely a hare with tucked-in legs and flattened ears, though it is difficult to identify clearly due to the earthy and calcareous deposits. All around, in relief, undulating patterns representing waves; the handle is vertical and rounded, highlighted by three incised lines; two filling holes are drilled into the central medallion to pour in the oil, and, toward the front, a large hole for the wick. Below, a doubling in both incised and raised relief. Roman Empire period. Length 12 cm - width 9 cm - height 4.5 cm
