Description

Alfred Chataud studied under Émile Loubon from 1857 to 1860, then moved to Paris and worked in Charles Gleyre's studio. Since his family owned property in Algeria, he made several short trips to that French colony beginning in 1856, before settling there permanently in 1892, near Sidi Moussa. He exhibited paintings with Orientalist themes at the Salons from 1864 to 1885.Diwane playing the guitri or spike lute.The work is signed in the lower right corner: A Chataud, barely legible due to adhesive tape covering the entire margins.
