Description

An important early 19th-century Neapolitan Charles X console table, characterized by an elegant architectural design and refined cabinetmaking. The piece features a fine mahogany veneer, embellished with thin maple fillets that outline the profiles and panels, creating a sophisticated color contrast with the deep, warm tones of the wood.The top is crowned by a slab of green Levanto marble, whose intense veining lends further prestige and grandeur to the piece as a whole. Of particular interest are the supports, skillfully carved and articulated into elegant interlaced volute motifs, flanked by fluted column elements with classically inspired capitals. The bases, embellished with plant-inspired carvings and geometric moldings, rest on shaped feet that emphasize the piece's solidity and monumental
