Description

A charming pair of patinated bronze animal sculptures depicting a rooster and a hen, in the style of Japanese works from the Meiji period in the 19th century. The rooster, with its finely chiseled plumage, is distinguished by its crest, wattles, and raised tail with elegantly fanned feathers. The hen, depicted with her head tilted toward the ground, displays a natural posture and delicately rendered plumage. The brown patina with warm hues highlights the relief of the feathers and adds to the charm of this decorative set. This pair reflects the interest of Japanese artists of the Meiji period in the animal kingdom and the decorative arts, which are particularly prized by collectors of Asian art. Date: 19th century, Meiji period. Origin: Japan. Material: Bronze with brown patina. Subject: Rooster and
