Description

A pair of Chinese porcelain plates known as "commissioned" or "East India Company" porcelain, dating from the 18th century, Qianlong period (1736-1795). These circular pieces feature a superb scalloped rim, characteristic of refined pieces produced for the European market. The set is hand-painted with the delicate polychrome glazes of the "Famille Rose" palette: In the center: A rich, asymmetrical floral design consisting of a large, fully bloomed peony, rosebuds, and leafy branches. The design is dotted with small, naturally arranged flowers.On the rim (the lower edge): A delicate geometric frieze featuring stylized scrolls and spearheads highlights the basin.On the wing: An alternating pattern of delicate floral bouquets and scalloped cartouches shaped like scrolls and pink ribbons.
