Description

Early 20th-Century French Green-Painted Wicker and Rattan Bench or SofaA charming early 20th-century French bench or sofa, constructed from woven wicker and bent rattan, retaining its original green-painted finish. The tall, arched backrest features two distinctive heart-shaped panels of finely woven wicker, framed by elegant scrolling and looped rattan decoration. The gently curved armrests continue the scrollwork design, while the long, slightly curved woven seat provides comfortable seating. Originally intended for a winter garden, conservatory, or veranda, this type of furniture was particularly fashionable during the late 19th and early 20th centuries. The design is reminiscent of the work of the renowned French furniture makers Perret et Vibert, celebrated for their finely crafted wicker and rattan furniture, which often incorporated elaborate woven patterns and decorative curved forms. The bench retains its attractive aged green painted finish, showing natural wear and areas of distressed paint that reveal the woven fibers beneath. This aged finish gives the piece a pleasing character and reflects its history and originality. An unusual and decorative example of French wicker furniture, suitable for a conservatory, garden room, or a relaxed country house interior. The sofa seat height is 38 cm.
