Description

A freestanding wooden coat rack in the "faux bamboo" style, likely made around 1970. The coat rack features a tall, turned central post adorned with several profiled rings that mimic the natural knots of bamboo. At the top, there are several turned wooden coat hooks, spaced at varying heights. The piece rests on a decorative base with four curved legs and turned connectors. The wood has a warm brown finish, with a natural patina and some signs of wear. Faux bamboo furniture became popular in the 19th century as a European alternative to genuine bamboo furniture, partly due to the growing interest in Asian art and design. Dimensions: 197H x 60L x 60P
