Description

A Murano blown-glass chandelier dating from the late 19th century, characterized by an elegant and sophisticated design. Composed of six lights supported by drooping arms, alternating with an equal number of leaves, it provides diffused and harmonious lighting. The central structure is embellished with a group of six flowers and six leaves, which add a refined decorative touch. The transparent glass highlights the masterful craftsmanship typical of Murano, making this piece an excellent example of the Venetian glassmaking tradition. A functional work of art ideal for spaces that call for distinctive and historically significant lighting.Product condition:This lamp, due to its age and wear, may require restoration and likely has an electrical system that does not comply with current
