wool.We owe this type of rug to the work of the semi-nomadic Kutaya tribes.They favor entirely geometric stylistic designs and a particularly harmonious color scheme, with an emphasis on blue, red, and cream.These rugs are still knotted in villages as well as in larger "cooperative"-style workshops.The colors regularly used are deep blue, deep red, ivory, and a touch of curry yellow.## The last photo shows an: Antique Kutaya rug, also known as Kutalya, made of wool and silk (a rare piece in excellent condition, suitable for a collection). This piece measures 111 cm x 165 cm; note its delicacy, the quality of the design, and the beauty of the colors. The pile is sheared to create texture, depending on the colors.
