Description

A two-seater conversation chair, known as a "Confident" or "Tête-à-tête," from the Napoleon III period (19th century). Its inverted "S"-shaped frame allows two people to sit side by side while facing each other, creating the ideal setting for an intimate conversation. The enveloping backrest features a series of finely turned baluster columns with a twisted design. The woodwork is made entirely of walnut, offering warm tones and a beautifully fine grain. The turned walnut base rests on its original bronze casters. The seat and the top of the backrest are upholstered in sumptuous deep black velvet. The finishes are accented with black trimmings, including a braided braid and generous fringes that delicately conceal the seat's waistband. The striking contrast between the warmth of the light walnut and the
