Description

A bronze-patinated automotive ornament, depicting an Egyptian-inspired winged sphinx, likely made in the 1920s or 1930s.The figure features a human head wearing the traditional pharaonic nemes headdress, combined with a lion's body. Two large, stylized wings--richly molded and ending in scrollwork--frame the figure.The treatment of the subject is part of the Egyptian-inspired style that was particularly popular during the Art Deco period.The sculpture rests on a circular base designed to be attached to a car radiator cap. The underside retains its central mounting mechanism, featuring a threaded rod approximately 6 mm in diameter, as well as two small symmetrical holes that may correspond to sockets for centering pins.Beautiful antique bronze patina, showing signs of
