Description

A puppet dating from the second quarter of the 20th century, representing the art of puppetry and European figure theater. The piece is distinguished by its plaster head, hand-modeled and hand-painted, with expressive and realistic features that lend the character a strong theatrical intensity and a striking dramatic personality. The body features an articulated wooden frame. The figure is dressed in an original, unique, and sumptuous black fur costume; this envelops the body and gives the marionette a mysterious, almost totemic aura, evoking a character from a fairy tale or an allegorical figure.
