Description

This painting could be associated with the work of Jenny Montigny (born 1856)--a prominent Belgian Impressionist and Luminist painter, and a student of the renowned artist Émile Claus. She dedicated a vast portion of her body of work to the depiction of childhood, motherhood, and interior scenes. Her paintings and pastels consistently capture moments from the lives of babies and young children with great tenderness.The child is standing inside his bed, his two small hands gripping the dark wooden top rail firmly, as if trying to pull himself up or attract attention. The bed--or crib--is fitted with a bumper featuring vertical blue (or purple) and white stripes, accented with delicate pink roses; these details, along with the background, are characteristic of designs from the 1900s.
