Description

A late 19th-century walnut table in the "Fratino" style, made in Italy. The tabletop features a pair of small extension leaves that enhance its functionality, while the structure is supported by ornate, openwork lyre legs, characteristic of the Baroque style. These legs are connected to the base by a central crossbar, also ornate and openwork, which adds an additional decorative and structural element. Two additional diagonal crossbars ensure the table's stability, connecting to the tabletop. This table stands out for the meticulous craftsmanship of the walnut wood, which gives the piece a sturdy yet refined appearance, typical of period furniture.Product condition:Due to its age and wear, this item requires restoration and refinishing. We strive to present the actual condition of the piece as fully
