Description

Oil on panel. The painting draws on the artistic style of Luca Giordano, both in the composition of the figures and in the overall style: the renowned Neapolitan painter depicted this subject several times, imbuing it with a sense of movement and an interplay of figures that served as a model for many subsequent artists and is also evident in this work.The body of Jesus--the only light-colored element among the other figures emerging from the shadows with varying shades--lies across the tomb, creating a connection between the other figures: from the left, the servant supporting his body by the shoulders, his mother Mary, and the other servant in the center supporting him by the cloth wrapped around his waist; two devout women; and at the far right, the apostle John kissing the Master's
