Description

A pair of spectacular postwar Earrings in Platinum and Palladium, set with Rubies and single cut Diamonds. All bezel set except for the Diamond which is set where the top part joins with the drop.This type of mixed-metal jewelry was popular after the war, as the use of precious metals was restricted by governments and it was necessary to make the most of scarce resources. Circa 1940's. These Earrings were tested using a metal testing device; the results, visible in the photos, show that they are composed of an alloy of Platinum, Palladium, and Rhodium. Rhodium was used to protect the underlying metals and was commonly employed during that era. The earrings are set with rubies and single cut Diamonds and a half PearlA matching Ring is avaiable separately, size 55. Resizing this ring
