Description

A classic stained-glass window from Cives, which appears to be overrun by nature.A sort of thistle climbs along the edges of the stained-glass window, with an owl perched on it. At the bottom, a new moon appears.The stained-glass window is signed on its wooden frame: "Lux Fournier, 3bis rue des Ursulines, Tours."The Fournier Workshop produced a large number of stained-glass windows between the late 19th and early 20th centuries.A curious detail: another piece appeared to be signed with a different name, but it has been erased.Technique: Cives and cathedral-style glass painted with grisaille and enamels, set in lead.A cracked cive, reinforced with putty.
