Description

This antique marble fireplace combines the deep black of Nero Marquina marble with contrasting white veins. Dating from approximately 1860-1880 and originating from Paris's 5th arrondissement, it is a "Boudin" model in the Louis XIV style. Its straight lines and rounded interior moldings provide a simple, refined setting for this richly veined stone.A wide, rounded molding runs along the lintel and extends down the jambs, accented by thinner profiles. The projecting mantelpiece completes the ensemble by emphasizing a distinct horizontal line. Across these various surfaces, the marble is adorned at times with fine white filaments and at other times with broader, lighter patterns. A side view also reveals the unadorned side returns, as well as the profiled bases upon which the jambs rest.
