Description

A walnut cabinet with two front doors; the interior features a niche separated by a shelf with a molded edge, followed by a large drawer at the top and six small drawers. The lower section has a false drawer (one of whose knobs was added later). The top of the cabinet is made of a single piece of wood. This piece, designed identically to a credenza, is flanked on either side by a beaded column. The door latches are later additions.
Italy, Tuscany, second half of the 16th century.
