Description

Bronze sculpture with a nuanced green patina titled Asclepius, a work by the Franco-Polish sculptor Igor Mitoraj (1944-2014).The work depicts a fragmentary male torso, of which only the lower part of the face, the neck, the chest, and one shoulder remain.Inspired by ancient Greco-Roman statuary, this composition explores one of the artist's signature themes: the depiction of the fragmented human body, evoking archaeological remains.The anatomical modeling is punctuated by incisions and geometric elements. A diagonal line crosses the chest, while a small square in relief appears on the torso. A second motif, set within a square frame, depicts a stylized hand.The title Asclepius refers to the Greek god of medicine and healing.Bronze with a green patina featuring brown hues, resting on a
