Description

Oil on canvas depicting a vast classical landscape populated by figures. In the foreground, near a stream, are two figures: one seated with his back to the viewer, draped in red; the other standing, draped in blue. In the center, a fortified castle stands on a promontory. In the background, bluish mountains stretch beneath a cloudy sky. Tall trees frame the composition, and two small figures walk along the path on the right.This "ideal" landscape follows the Roman tradition exemplified by Gaspard Dughet, known as Le Guaspre (1615-1675), Nicolas Poussin's brother-in-law, whose use of successive planes and trees as a repoussoir is echoed here. Work by a follower or a workshop, from the late 17th or 18th century. Set in an antique gilded wood frame with a striking decorative presence. Monumental
