Description

Polychrome earthenware, circa 1930. Henriot Manufactory.Rare model.André Galland (1886 -1965):André Galland, the son of a sheet manufacturer, was a French draftsman and illustrator. He was made a Knight of the Legion of Honor in 1933, in recognition of a body of work that influenced his era. An eclectic artist, he also created earthenware, posters, and lithographs that are now sought-after by collectors.After studying at the Collège Rollin, the École des Arts Décoratifs, and the École des Beaux-Arts in Paris, he abandoned his preparations for the Prix de Rome to enter the workforce. He turned to journalism and began his career as a sketch artist under Paul Renouard. A few years later, he became Renouard's student at the École des Arts Décoratifs. He mastered an original drawing
