Description

Oak clothes press, Netherlands, 19th century. A clothes press featuring a closed cabinet in its lower section, made of oak in the Netherlands. As is often the case with this type of utilitarian object, it is unadorned and was used to smooth out clothing. It is rare for such objects to have survived, as they were very often discarded as soon as new technological advances became available. Oak was chosen for its construction due to its hardness and durability.· Dimensions: 76 x 52 x 171 cm.
