Description

An impressive bronze sculpture with a magnificent chocolate-brown patina; its creation by the foundry Susse Frères represents a true technical feat, given the complexity of the work.Indeed, the depiction of the man's physical tension--expressing the power of the Force--as well as the angel's piercing gaze and commanding posture--symbolizing the dominance of Reason--are particularly expressive. The details of the work--the plumage of the wings, the musculature, and the patina that catches the light so beautifully--make this sculpture a masterpiece from the Susse workshop, bearing its hallmark and reminiscent of Barye's Theseus Fighting the Minotaur.Auguste Carli (1868-1930) won the Second Prize of Rome in 1896.
