Description

This Murano blown-glass chandelier, dating from the mid-19th century, exemplifies the elegance of Venetian design from that era. The fixture features six lights supported by drooping arms, interspersed with finely crafted leaves. The central stem is adorned with a pattern of six flowers alternating with leaves, creating a harmonious and intricate appearance. A pendant below completes the design, adding a touch of refinement. The transparent, handcrafted glass highlights the mastery of Murano's glassmakers, making this piece a distinctive example of Venetian glass art.Product condition:This lamp, due to its age and wear, may require restoration and likely has an electrical system that does not comply with current regulations.
