Description

An elegant, two-handled, amphora-shaped vase in the Neoclassical/Empire style, of French manufacture, dating to the late 19th or early 20th century.
Crafted from chased and turned bronze and gilt brass, the vase rests on a molded circular foot. Its body is divided into two registers: a gadrooned lower section and a smooth, polished upper section, separated by a refined relief band featuring a garland of roses and foliage, framed by beaded borders. This same chased floral motif reappears on the flared neck, the base, and the tops of the two tall, geometric, elevated handles. The amphora retains its rare, original, removable cylindrical insert made of clear blown glass--designed to hold water and cut flowers without damaging the metal.

Condition: In good overall condition. The structure is solid, and the glass insert is intact (showing only slight limescale clouding from use). The gilt surface displays a pleasing aged patina, with minor oxidation and light surface wear--visible in the photographs--consistent with its age.
