Description

Rare Tanegashima Teppo netsuke resembling a Japanese matchlock pistol from the late 18th/early 19th-century Edo period; the craftsmanship is of exceptionally high quality considering the period of its manufacture; 20th-century replicas are of much lower quality. This 7 cm long netsuke can be completely disassembled and is capable of firing. It features a sturdy iron barrel with a beautiful patina, a brass trigger guard with a patinated finish, and a patinated brass retaining ring. The muzzle is unpierced, and the hammer lacks a trigger mechanism.
