Description

This small oil painting on a wooden panel, created in the first half of the 19th century, continues the tradition of the English Romantic landscape, inspired by the Dutch masters of the "Golden Age". To the right, beside an intricately shaped tree with a birdhouse, is depicted a neglected old house with a roof overgrown with vegetation and ivy. To the left opens a wide valley, transitioning into a dense forest; in the distance, against the backdrop of a mountain ridge dissolving in a bluish-grey haze, the towers of an ancient castle can be discerned. In the foreground, a peasant woman and her two children are depicted walking unhurriedly along a winding country road, enlivening the landscape and bringing a narrative element into it. The colour palette is restrained: the deep tones of the
