Description

A beautiful pair of antique iron garden chairs, in the François Carré style, likely manufactured between the late 19th century and the early 20th century.Each chair features a circular seat composed of metal slats arranged in radiating patterns around a riveted central medallion.The backrest is made of curved and riveted iron strips, while the armrests extend into elegant decorative volutes. The set rests on four slender legs.Their design is reminiscent of the metal chairs with flexible slats developed by François Carré beginning in the 19th century, though they are not formally attributed to this designer or to any specific manufacturer.Both armchairs retain a beautiful antique green patina, along with traces of oxidation and wear resulting from age and outdoor use.A set of antique garden furniture with
