Description

Catavinos or bernegal. Silver. 18th century.With contrasting marks.A silver-plated vessel, known as a wine glass or bernegal (with a stem), featuring two flat, S-shaped handles topped with simple scrolls and a line of scalloped edges along the rim that extends to the flat, undecorated base. The hallmarks on the handles are obscured due to lack of space. It is known that a silversmith named Juan Guzmán y Ramírez worked in Córdoba, Spain, in the 18th century, and that several silversmiths in the city bore the surname Pesquero. Bernegales and other similar vessels with scalloped rims were common pieces of 17th-century Spanish silverwork, but they were generally relegated to less important centers in the 18th century. This piece can be compared to others, such as the silver bernegal dating from the
