Description

Okimono faceted wood carving depicting a mouse. A Japanese carving technique called ittobori, which refers to work done with wood chisels whose sharp, angular facets remain visible on the finished piece. This piece embodies the spirit of mingei, an art form that embodies the philosophy of folk craftsmanship by celebrating raw beauty, the texture of the wood, and the slight imperfections left by the artist's hand, rather than a smooth, artificial finish. Artist's seal on the bottom. Japan, circa 1980, 9 x 5 x 4 cm.
