Description

A beautiful, exceptionally fine sculpture by the artist Pier Claudio Pantieri depicting a satyr with a flute, made of glazed ceramic, from the Faenza school, circa 1950.Although Brutalism originated primarily in architecture, a similar aesthetic--close to Art Brut and Informalism--spread in the fields of sculpture and ceramics after World War II. Pantieri's works from that period reflect these trends.Pantieri graduated from the G. Ballardini Art Institute in Faenza and began his artistic career as a ceramicist, initially creating works inspired by the "Picassian primitivist" style, experimenting with new techniques and artistic languages by combining the roles of sculptor and painter.We see this particularly in this work: the sculptor's touch is evident even in the artistic
