Description

A refined watercolor on paper depicting a young woman from the common folk, seated and dressed in traditional costume. The work is by the celebrated Roman painter and watercolorist Pio Joris (Rome, 1843-1921)--a prominent figure in late 19th-century Roman painting and a member of the "XXV della Campagna Romana" (a group of artists dedicated to the Roman countryside).
The painting is distinguished by its freshness of execution, swift brushwork, and the vibrant color of the drapery, rendered through skillful washes and highlights--a hallmark of the finest tradition of the Roman school of watercolor.
In the lower-left corner, the work bears a handwritten dedication, "Al mio..." ("To my..."),
