Description

Located between Le Croisic and Le Pouliguen, the charming little village of Batz-sur-Mer has captivated painters since the second half of the 19th century. The Impressionists and their followers were particularly drawn to this area for its unique light and the way it plays off the sea and the local houses. Small, everyday scenes unfold here, seemingly untouched by the passage of time. This small painting captures a quiet, peaceful moment of daily life during fair weather. Michel Coffe--likely a local artist of note--delightfully immortalizes these small sailboats, which can still be seen today navigating along the port of Batz-sur-Mer.
