Description

American School, circa 1950-1960. "Fight for the Beauty"" Oil on cardboard. A dynamic composition with a distinctly illustrative style, linked to the world of "pulp" fiction and mid-20th-century American editorial illustration. The scene depicts a violent confrontation between a cowboy and a Native American, while in the background, a female figure on horseback serves as the dramatic focal point of the narrative. Tension is created by strong, expressive gestures visible in the faces and bodies, and reinforced by the use of vivid, contrasting colors.This painting follows in the tradition of publishers such as Vault Comics and the imagery characteristic of "pulp" magazines, where a heroic aesthetic, exoticism, and the dramatization of the American Frontier were essential elements for capturing the
