Description

The scene depicted corresponds to the one found on the interior of an 18th-century glazed ceramic cooler, now in the collection of the Museo Nacional del Prado.This piece likely belonged to the famous and extremely expensive tableware set that the Duke of Urbino, Guidobaldo II, commissioned in 1570 for Philip II of Spain as a diplomatic gift.According to information published on the museum's official website, this scene appears to be inspired by a drawing by the Florentine painter Taddeo Zuccaro.
