Description

Psyche of Capua. Plaster bust with a stamp from the Louvre's reproductions on the back.This Roman bust, originally made of marble, likely dates from the first century B.C. It comes from excavations conducted at the Capua amphitheater in the 18th century. (Southern Italy)This sculpture is incorrectly named Psyche; historians now believe it is more likely a depiction of Aphrodite. This sculpture, which has a modern appearance due to its missing parts, is currently housed in the Museum of Naples.In its current condition, note some scuffing or wear on the edges, as well as minor impacts.
