Description

A foldable travel boot jack dating from the Victorian era of the late 19th century. Originally used by military officers or horsemen, it allowed them to easily remove their boots without having to touch them with their hands. It consists of two hardwood halves joined by brass hinges, designed to fold like a book. The two removable metal tools housed in the recesses are used to slip the boots on; when opened, they form a T-shape. In addition to the boot jack, the set includes useful vintage accessories: a button fastener, an awl, a corkscrew, and a scraper.
