Royal Copenhagen, Denmark:The absence of the printed royal crown and the circular "Royal Copenhagen Denmark" stamp (which were gradually introduced starting in the late 19th century and became standard in the 20th century) is characteristic of 19th-century Danish bisque porcelain, particularly those modeled after neoclassical designs. o ENERET stamp -- "exclusive" in Danish.The sculptor's tools are absent; there are two chips that in no way detract from the statue's grandeur.
