members of the Visscher family were prominent art dealers and map publishers in Amsterdam. The company's founder, C. J. Visscher, had premises near those of Pieter van den Keere and Jodocus Hondius, of whom he may have been a student. Beginning around 1620, he designed a number of individual maps, including one of the British Isles, but his first atlas consisted of maps printed from plates purchased from van den Keere and published as is with a few additions, including historical battle scenes. Some maps bear the Latinized form of the family name: Piscator. After Visscher's death, his son and grandson--both bearing the same name--published a considerable number of atlases, which were constantly revised and updated, though most of them lacked an index and varied content. Nicholaes Visscher II's widow continued the business until it eventually passed into the hands of Pieter Schenk.
