Description

A pair of oblong lidded vases made of Blue John with green, honey-colored, and bluish veins and touches of purple.They are adorned with beautiful "ormoulu" ornamentation--that is, gilded and chiseled bronze typical of Matthew Boulton's work.The body is adorned with superb, very finely chiseled ram's heads, and the base features lotus leaves. They rest on a base featuring a fluted pedestal and a laurel garland. The pedestal rests on a square, stepped base with curved corners.The handle is shaped like a pinecone set on a leafy terrace.There are a few small, old restorations and cracks due to the fragility of the material.Very good overall condition.Given their quality, this pair of Blue John vases is comparable to the work and production of Matthew Boulton around 1780.Pieces of this
