Description

A remarkable Louis XIII-era cabinet, consisting of an upper section and a separate base with four turned legs, joined by a shelf.The front features a particularly elaborate architectural composition, centered around a richly molded central door adorned with geometric relief decoration, flanked by eight drawers with molded fronts and metal pull handles.The central door reveals an interior fitted with several shelves, providing ample storage space.The piece stands out for the quality of its successive moldings, its relief-carved frames, its overhanging cornice decorated with small, rhythmic moldings, and its elegant base with turned balusters.The sides feature beautiful molded panels.The cabinet's lacquer was applied after the period in which it was made, giving it today a particularly striking presence and a sober
